Q.1 READ THE FOLLOWING CASE AND ANSWER THE BELOW GIVEN QUESTIONS

ABC Corporation is a mid-sized organization with several departments, including marketing, finance, human resources, and operations. The CEO of the company, Mr. Smith, was concerned about the company's overall performance and decided to conduct a review of its organizational structure.

During the review, Mr. Smith discovered that the company's span of control was too narrow, with each manager having only three subordinates. This led to an increase in administrative expenses and a delay in decision-making. The CEO felt that a wider span of control would help in improving the company's performance.

Mr. Smith, therefore, decided to restructure the company and create a wider span of control. He reduced the number of managers and increased the number of subordinates each manager was responsible for. This resulted in a flatter organizational structure, improved communication, and faster decision-making.

However, the change was not welcomed by some of the managers who felt that the wider span of control would lead to a loss of control over their teams. To address their concerns, Mr. Smith ensured that each manager received adequate training in delegation and empowerment. This helped the managers to build trust with their subordinates and ensure that they were accountable for their work.

The change in the company's structure had a positive impact on the company's overall performance. There was a reduction in administrative expenses, improved communication, and a faster decision-making process. The employees also felt empowered and more involved in the decision-making process, resulting in a positive work environment.
