The Japanese have a family approach to business. Workers are not regarded as tools for profit but as a part of a large family and hence sharing the same fate as everyone else in the family.

Once an employee is hired they never fire him but he continues to be with the company till he retires. They believe in the lifetime employment system and hence are very careful in the selection of their employees.

According to the late Akio Morita, Chairman and Co-founder of Sony Corporation, 'We have only one life. Those who join Sony give the brightest part of their life for Sony and hence it was the company's obligation to give the employees the 'joy of life' through their work. If an employee is not as able as he was thought to be then it is the company's responsibility to find him a position more suited to his abilities somewhere else in the company.'

Just like it is unthinkable for a parent to abandon their children the same is the relationship between an organization and its employees.
